Norwegian launches new routes to Fort Lauderdale, Florida

Norwegian launches Fort Lauderdale, Florida, as a new destination from Copenhagen and Stockholm. At the same time, tickets for the winter season from Oslo and Stockholm to New York and Bangkok are made available for sale.

“Long-haul flying has for way too long been characterized by expensive fares and limited flexibility. The great reception Norwegian has received after launching low-fare tickets to New York and Bangkok shows that there is a need for competitive fares from Scandinavia to the U.S. and Asia. Our entry into the long-haul market continues and we are pleased to launch Fort Lauderdale, Florida, as a new Norwegian route from Copenhagen and Stockholm. At the same time, we launch ticket sales for the winter season to New York and Bangkok from Oslo and Stockholm,” said CEO Bjørn Kjos.

Fort Lauderdale, Florida, is Norwegian's first long-haul route from Copenhagen and the third from Stockholm. Fort Lauderdale is known as "The Gateway to Florida" and is centrally located about half an hour's drive north of Miami. Popular destinations such as Orlando, the Everglades and Key West are easily accessible by car. Several cruises originate in Fort Lauderdale. The routes to New York and Bangkok from Oslo and Stockholm will start in May /June.
